OFFICE SEEKING IS MAIN THING

With West Virginia Democrats and Wilson is Shabbily Treated.

(Special to the Telegram)
WASHINGTON, D. C., Mar. 6—So far as West Virginia is concerned the inauguration of the new governor at Charleston, seemed to be of greater importance than the inauguration of the new president at Washington. While almost every state in the union sent either military or civil organizations, West Virginia was not represented in any way in the inaugural parade in Washington on March 4. Of course there were a number of people from that state in Washington who witnessed the parade and saw the inauguration of the new president, but it was a noticeable fact and largely commented upon that there was little enthusiasm among the tens of thousands who saw the new president take the oath of office and there was little cheering as the parade marched down Pennsylvania avenue.

While the Democratic national committeeman from West Virginia was one of the original Wilson men, and although the claim has been made that it was through his influence and loyalty that Mr. Wilson was nominated and afterward carried West Virginia, it would seem strange that neither the national committeeman nor any one else had arranged to have any West Virginia organization in the parade. Governor Cole Bleese, of South Carolina, refused to allow the South Carolina troops to march in the inaugural parade because he was afraid they would have to march behind some of the negro troops from the District of Columbia. What reason there may have been for a failure to send the West Virginia troops to the inauguration has not been made known here, but it is a fact that neither military nor civil life was represented by any organization of any kind in the big parade, which was the principal feature of the inauguration of President Wilson.

It may be possible that the enthusiasm of the West Virginia Democrats is confined to office seeking and not to the welcoming of a Democratic president into office.
